While representing the general business interests of many clients, Bill focuses his practice on two distinct areas of law - representing management interests in labor and employment law and representing the construction industry in contract matters. He is a successful litigator who has handled hundreds of significant cases ranging from race discrimination to defective building claims, product defects and more.

Bill’s clients come from a multitude of industries and include banks, restaurants franchisers, manufacturers, contractors, private business owners, multinational corporations and others.

He is a frequent lecturer on construction and employment law issues and has published many articles on these subjects.
